Diving into the Robin Raina Foundation

Publicly available financials suggest the Robin Raina Foundation shares similar financial discrepancy issues and poor disclosure practices as Ebix.

One of the Ebix’s CEO’s biggest self-promotion points is his commitment to charity. Kudos.

As part of our due-diligence process, Viceroy has conducted background checks into Ebix’s directors and their ventures. When diving into the Robin Raina foundation, we have found inconsistencies between Robin Raina’s self-promotion of the Robin Raina Foundation (RRF) and the financial accounts of the foundation and its affiliates.

Specifically, we have been unable to reconcile the Robin Raina Foundation’s outflows to outflows expressed by Raina himself and to public targets set by the foundation.

SAT: How much you give to the foundation? What is its annual outlay?
RR: I hate to talk about it. But yes, a majority of the money that comes in for the foundation comes from me. In a given year, RRF will typically spend about $2 million.

Greatly moved by the plight of the poor people living in the slums and the failure of the measures taken towards their upliftment, RRF founder Robin Raina took matters into his own hands and in October 2007 laid out a $20 million ambitious plan to build 6000 homes for the slum dwellers of Delhi. Raina believes, “to make any dream a reality requires a carefully crafted plan and commitment to achieve it” and is putting in every possible effort to make Slum Housing Project a huge success. With more than 2304 homes already having been built, RRF is determined to change the lives of thousands in need.

The RRF solicits donations based on this premise, however financial filings for tax exempt entity show that the RRF has only outlaid $4.8m since inception in 2004, significantly less than $2m in “a given year”. In fact, the RRF has never outlaid $2m in any given year:

It’s also worth noting that charitable organizations’ fundraising activities are regulated by state law. The Robin Raina Foundation is based in Alpharetta, GA and solicits donations on its website, and thus we would expect the foundation to hold a Charity License with the Secretary of State.

We note that the RRF’s license with the Georgia Secretary of State to solicit charitable donations was last renewed in 2012, and expired in 2014.
Of further concern, Ebix appears to own the RRF’s domain which actively solicits donations and includes the charity’s payment portal. There should be a clear division of duties for these separate entities.

Where does the money go?
Outside of audit costs, travel costs and administrative expenses, the entirety of the RRF’s charitable contributions are moved offshore to Indian companies/trusts, which are poorly disclosed in RRF’s 990 lodgments.

We understand that the “RRF C Trust” is the Robin Raina Charitable Trust, which does not even fall under a “RRF” acronym:

Following this trail, we can see that the Robin Raina Charitable Trust’s Foreign Contribution Regulation Act (FCRA) license expired in November 2016, having failed to apply for its renewal by June 2016⁵. Under Indian law, charitable entities without FCRA licenses cannot legally receive foreign contributions.

In spite of this, the trust’s ngodarpan.gov.in profile shows donated amounts in 2016 and 2017. Note that the amounts below are in INR and the declared amount sanctioned for 2016 roughly matches the contribution listed on RRF’s form 990 for the year.

Similarly to the RRF, the trust shares an address with Ebix subsidiary EBIX Software Asia SEZ⁶.

There were no results for tax-exempt institutions in India’s Income Tax Department register for any institution with the name Slum Dweller (multiple search terms conducted, we welcome any feedback if this institution is found), nor any results fitting “Mahatma Gandhi Homes Initiative”:

The only Indian entity we could find that fit the title Slum Dwellers was a Mumbai based entity called Slum Dwellers Development India, which turns over $0 and outlays ~15,000 rupees a year. We do not believe this is the correct entity.

From a donor’s perspective, we would expect greater transparency into where these charitable donations are being transferred to.

There is simply insufficient evidence and capital outlay to suggest that almost 40% of the Slum Housing Project’s houses have been completed with a total outlay from the RRF of less than 25% of the projected $20m cost, which presumably include contributions to the various other initiatives conducted by the RRF.

It’s also worth noting that several other issues pertaining to the accuracy of the RRF’s filings have previously been raised by short sellers in the past, and evidence accounts that do not reconcile, and hundreds of thousands of dollars allegedly unaccounted for:

Pending any response from Robin Raina or Ebix (who own the Charity’s domain), Viceroy are in the process of filing a complaint with both the State Secretary’s office in Georgia and with the IRS.
